Aversion verb form

Many people find themselves confused when faced with the choice between negative and unwilling. While these two adjectives have many similarities, they are not used interchangeably. If you want to describe a negative reaction to something (such as a harmful side effect from medicines) or dangerous meteorological conditions (such as a blizzard), negatively is the right choice; you would not say that you had a reverse reaction to medication or that there was unwilling weather. Unwilling is most often followed by the preposition of (which in she is unwilling to shellfish), but not in all cases; For example, you could describe someone as risk unwilling. Normally unwilling to denote a degree of dislike and avoidance, but when preceded by the word not (as in he was not averse to having another drink), it can be used as a pointedly understated way of expressing an interest in something. In short, negatives tend to be used to describe effects, conditions and results; while unwillingly refers to feelings and inclinations. Definition from Wiktionary, the free dictionary Jump to navigation Jump to search From Latin aversus, past participle of avertere (two avert) Pronunciation[edit] (Received pronunciation) IPA(key): /əˈvɜːs/ Adjective[edit] averse (comparative more unwilling, superlative most unwilling) To have a repugnance or resistance in the mind. 2004, Arthur Schopenhauer, chapter 2, in essays of Schopenhauer [1]D this is why the most eminent intellect has always been strongly unwilling to any kind of disruption, distraction and above all to the violent disruption caused by noise; other people do not take any special notice of this kind of thing. 1885, E. T. A. Hoffmann, The Entail [2]I assure you, cousin, the old gentleman, answered that the baron, despite his unpleasant manner, really is one of the most excellent and kind men in the world. As I have already told you, he did not take upon himself these manners until he became the master of the entail; before, he was a modest, gentle youth. Besides, he is not, after all, as bad as you make him appear to be; And moreover, I'd like to know why you're so unwilling to him. As my uncle said these words he smiled mockly, and the blood rushed hot and furious into my face. Synonyms: disliking, disinclined, forward, unwilling, reluctant, disgusted turned away or backwards. The tracks unwilling a lying alert gave, / And led the viewfinder backwards from the cave. (obsolete) Located on the opposite side (to or from). (heraldry) Turned to show your back, like by a right hand. Notes[edit] The concepts negative and unwilling are sometimes confused, although their meanings are somewhat different. Averse most often refers to things, denoting something that is in opposition to someone's interests - something one might refer to as an adversity or adversary - (unfavorable winds, an attitude that is negative for our ideals). Averse usually refers to humans, and implies that one has a distaste, or aversion to anything (a leader unwilling to war; an investor unwilling to risk taking). Unwilling is most often used in a construction that I am unwilling to ... Averse pops up less often in this type of construction, describes a person instead of one thing, and should bear a meaning of actively opposed instead of having an aversion courage. Unwilling from is an older form, which corresponds to the modern unwilling to.
